

It was constructed of broken stone in the 13th century. At first it was an Orthodox church, while later, after becoming a Uniate church, it was also provided with another, Catholic, altar.

This church has two altars even today. It is visited by people of both confessions and people of both confessions are buried in its cemetery.